

The Pied Piper and the Mari- onette

S. C. Coleman

© Copyright 2021, All Rights Reserved

Introduction/Summary

The system of dependence, which we call modern society, is built on the fundamental principles of child grooming and abuse. To understand our abusers, and abuses that we may have inflicted on their behalf, we cannot look at abuse as merely evil; for doing so would succumb to the intent of our abusers. Instead, we must understand the purpose and methods of abuse as they are; vehicles for domination. When they say that they have authority over us, is to say that they have dominion, what they mean is that they can inflict any abuses upon us that they wish.

Chapter One

Grooming

Grooming is a word often used to describe the acquisition of children for sexual exploitation. Yet, this strategy goes beyond simple sex abuse, which has control over the individual at the heart of it. The objective for grooming is not simply to have sex with a child, but gain a firm dominance over them. A perfect way that this is expressed can be found in the Bible, under Proverbs, when it is stated; “train up a child in the way that he will go, and when his is old he will not depart from it.” Therefore, the younger that a child is abused, the more control the abuser will retain. Now, as child grooming is inherently based off a parenting tactics, our best model for understanding this subject is through parents. First, parents will often withhold objects of importance from a child, in order to get them to accomplish a task. In an abuser, acceptance is the most often used weapon against the child’s mind, and we see this exact theme within the so-called school system; more on that later. Furthermore, in the works of Neil Strauss Darrow, a pick-up artist seeks to occupy the role of an estranged father, from the viewpoint of a male; for an impressionable young woman. In fact, pick-up artistry perfectly explains and reflects the tactics of a groomer, as it is essentially that. Now, to groom a broken adult is one thing, but to inflict it upon a child is another matter entirely. Adults, especially ones that had been previously abused, will be more susceptible to such tactics. However, as children are blank slates, those that target children are looking to establish a strong hold on the person. In fact, the motherly role is actually the most potent for this purpose. This is even admitted by Neil Strauss, as women tend to be the best pick-up artists, and with one of the important elements being approachability.

Now, what type of person cannot be groomed, and which children are the most insulated against it. The answer is simple, as both pick-up artists and groomers are imposter parents, those children that have parents should be the most insulated. However, this is not always true, as only a holistic home can provide protection against such manipulations. Since the two subjects are imposters, they will immediately be pushed aside by the real article. In the book The Confidence Game, by Maria Konnikova, we find another explanation of the fortified person. This is he who is content. A content child cannot be exploited, and a content adult is unassailable. Therefore, an abuser's objective is to break the home, but the removal of contentment is the primary objective. Therefore, a large amount of effort is put into not only destroying the home, but also removing contentment from life. This secondary effect you see in the promotion of a so-called luxurious lifestyle, as with music videos on Yachts, in Casinos, and overt demonstrations of wealth. This is simply one example of the attempts to diminish a person's position in life, and make them feel discontent with it. Now, the primary places that children can be taken from are broken families, orphanages, churches, and any place that a broken person might seek sanctuary. A perfect place which provides an understanding of this is within the Osage Nation. Accurately referred to as the nation of mothers, Osage homemakers would tattoo the spider on the backs of their hands. This was done for many reasons, and the desired destruction of the home is why the symbol was so heavily targeted. This shows that our ancestors of the Osage Nation were highly aware of grooming, and how to protect against it. You see, only through socially constructed, and government regulated, child protective institutions can child predators have a hunting ground. Conversely, in the Osage culture, even if a child came from a broken home, they would have a multitude of inviting and welcoming homes to choose from. This emphasis on familial hospitality is not only present in Osage culture, as the same can be found in old Scandinavian culture. Naturally, the clear presence of the Vatican controlled church destroyed and uprooted these cultures, driving child abuse and children into the protective arms of the vague Mother Church; and, sometimes, the Virgin Mother. Now, in contrast, the story of the Osage spider also brings another viewpoint to us. When all the other nations had selected the animals that would represent them, the Osage were left without one. So, they went out and searched for one, but they came across a spider that had spun her web across the path. They asked why the spider did this, and the spider replied that where she spun her web, all came. Similar to the world wide web, most institutions that we adhere to today are based around this principle.

Now, grooming is not only about causing the perfect situation to target a weakened individual, but also requires patience and planning. During the Ghislaine Maxwell trial, an alleged psychologist, named Dr. Rocchio, testified about the nature of grooming. She said that an abuser would seek to separate the child from the parent and begin a campaign of desensitization, according to reports on the trial. This might include hugs or other forms of touching, which would lead to desensitization. The key word here is the campaign of desensitization, and it is a campaign of conquest not only against the body, but the mind as well. This can also be accomplished through the use of explicit movies and pornography. Now, the use of this tactic on the public is a product of ancient Greek and Roman culture, which we find in the Vatican dominated world of today. Nude Greek and Roman statues help to desensitize the public to sexual exploitation, in coordination with public bath houses, and public sex parties; all of which are present in ancient Roman and Greek culture. Therefore, as our world is dominated by the Rome based Vatican, the presence of such methods is of no surprise. Furthermore, when we examine fraternities and sororities, where politicians and the ruling elites are pulled from, we find many ways the desensitization is implemented; especially, through drinking and sex parties. Of course, not only are Universities based out of the fundamentals of Greek and Roman domination, but the fraternities and sororities openly describe themselves through the Greek Alphabet.

The ultimate objective behind grooming is to dominate, but behind that is the objective for use. Within the natural desire for a parent to protect their child, such as keeping them from playing in dangerous traffic, a parent will dominate the actions of their child; and control them through special parenting tactics. On the other hand, the groomer, and abuser, do not have the child's best interest in mind, but they will swear that they do. No, instead, such individuals, at the heart of their domination, wish to use the target as a tool. This could come in the form of basic prostitution, but it can come in many other ways, also. Either way, according to Dr. Rocchio, an abused target will be more susceptible to adverse outcomes. Of course, the ability to abuse is important for dominance, but an abused individual will also be more submissive to the master; and more susceptible to do their bidding, whatever that may be. In fact, an abused child is more likely to abuser others, on the abuser's behalf. Of course, as explained by Dr. Rocchio, the ability to abuse a person at will does not come easily, just as Rome was not built in a day. It requires patience and a number of smaller abuses to establish a desensitized victim. This can come in many forms, but our government is the best example for us. Set-up by child abusers, all of our governments were sent to abuse us. Taking one example, like licensing, we find that every portion of our lives, from marriage to travel, holds a license. These licenses we freely pay, which, coupled with other small robberies, render us destitute. However, why do we succumb to such rampant abuses, because each one was established over time; little by little. Just as the child abuser will begin with innocent touching, the governments begin with innocent reasons.

On the other hand, desensitization, if done correctly, can also strengthen an individual. You see, one important component of the abuser is dependence, and the ability to withhold something so they can get the victim to do their bidding. If there is nothing to withhold, and the desensitization is used to make an individual more dependent on themselves, and their own actions, the abusers tactics can be used to fortify; rather than weaken. In the U. S. Marine Corps' basic training, the idea of breaking one down, in order to build them back up, is often used. This is an example where abuse and desensitization are used in a different way; in order to fashion a self-dependent warrior. Similar lessons you can find in Spartan, Jewish, Samurai, and other cultures. However, the minor fortifying abuses are less obvious in the Jewish example. Therefore, we shall focus on the Spartan. At age 12 a Spartan youth is taken from the home and put into warrior training. Here, they are put in many difficult positions, and one of these requires them to steal. However, should they get caught, they will be punished as a thief. This teaches that a warrior, ultimately, is dependent on himself, and the consequences for his actions will be his own. Sure, a warrior is stronger with others, but it ultimately comes down to him. His courage, or his cowardice, will affect him first. This is separate from the instruction that his fellows are also dependent upon him, and vice versa. The main objective to all of this training is to empower the individual to be more effective, and independent, rather than molding them into a basic pawn. Of course, this runs contrary to what we are taught about the military, and how individual warriors are dependent upon the unit. Instead, as with the small unit leadership model in the Marine Corps, we find that the unit is actually dependent on each individual; each and every one. This can be found in the phrase, "you're only as strong as your weakest link," which encourages the building up of the weak. For these reasons and many others, the child abusers throughout the world despise the military, and any warrior building structures.

Now, we have an understanding of dependence and independence. A warrior is independent, of both body and mind, while a pawn is dependent upon the chess player for its action. The desire for an individual's dependence can be found in the government, school system, and church; which are all structures that cultivate dependence upon them. A person cannot live life without these three pillars; we are told. In fact, to further confuse things, within the propaganda of an independent woman, we actually find a highly dependent woman. Instead of being dependent upon a man, the modern independent woman is dependent upon social welfare programs, the education system, the courts for alimony, and many other structures. Instead of being self-sufficient, the independent feminist is far from it, simply trading one abuser for another. In fact, the male abuser is traded for, arguably, a much worse one. Subsequently, as our modern systems of governance are built by child abusers, of both the male and female sex, we find the most disturbing situation of all to be based around previously abused children. As an example, a child that seeks help from an abusive father will, instead, find worse abuse from the state institutions that they are placed in. Such a child cannot go to a doctor or church for help, either, as these are built around the same principles. Naturally, a lot of broken men will turn to the military, but a lot of broken women will turn to the University. While military men become more warlike and independent, University educated women become more dependent, and more abused. Therefore, a major split occurs, where women and men can no longer relate to one another. This is also why most masculine men, today, can only be found within the military. Those that come from the prison system are one step short of boys, while those that come from the University are one step short of women. In the wild law of kill or be killed, none can stand-up to the determined and trained foe that embodies the warrior spirit. Therefore, the only protection that we have, currently, can be found within military circles. One example of this can be seen with military tattoos, and the banning of such by the child abusing leadership. A military tattoo, especially in terms of sailors, are generally colored. An octopus might represent military duty in the south pacific, while a swallow might represent leagues traveled. Of course, we need look no further than Sailor Jerry to find an example of colorful military tattoos. Now, this will represent two things. First, the purveyor of such tattoo will likely have not gone to prison, as prison tattoos tend to be black. Additionally, a person who sports colored military tattoos, whether of a unit or duty station, will also present a shield to the weak. Similar to the idea of chivalry, and knightly decoration, the military tattoo will represent a person that is trained, and is likely to come to the defense of others. Conversely, someone that sports mostly black tattoos will appear as a criminal, thief, or murderer; as they will likely have spent time in prison. From this stand-point, we recognize the purpose of the political campaigns against military tattoos, and the protection of prison tattoos. This is because prisoners will become dependent on the system, while warriors will not. Naturally, we find an abuser's mouth-piece, when we hear the phrase "chivalry is dead."

Now, to fully understand grooming, we must look to the church, school, hospitals, and the government's social programs. Of course, grooming starts before birth, even; while the birth certificate can be seen as a state sanctioned grooming method. In this regard, we find groomed groomers, meaning abused that abuse; on behalf of the main abuser. A parent, unwittingly, will groom their children for the state, the church, and other institutions of higher dependence. This can be seen in the use of time-outs, and establishing a fear of the penal system. Furthermore, registering a child with a birth certificate forces them into our abusive system, and can be seen as a little abuse. To understand the purpose of this little abuse, we only have to imagine an adult that possesses no birth certificate. This seemingly insignificant piece of paper is required for nearly everything, including the acquisition of licenses for work, the acquisition of a passport, and the like. Of course, the government, in all its kindness, provided other ways for us to submit to them, and enslave ourselves. Even if we do not possess a birth certificate, we can register for a social security number. In this manner, the state withholds life, in order to get what it desires. This is no surprise as the government was modeled by the groomers of children. Of course, much of the grooming that happens before birth can be found in so-called prenatal check-ups. Here, fear is used as the most potent tool. Instilling fear of adverse outcomes, through horror stories of birth defects, miscarriages, and the like, an authority figure can get the expecting mother to do almost anything. The doctors use this tactic, and, out of fear for the safety of her child, the mother will submit to anything that a prenatal authority figure, or doctor, will advise. Of course, this is not so much advising as it is an order. In fact, a pregnant woman, often, has to get a doctor's order to travel aboard planes; which perfectly describes how doctors and other such authority figures see themselves. They are our parents, with absolute dominion over our actions. On the other hand, as most of their existence is based on the fundamentals of child abuse, when such people encounter the genuine article, they might shy away. Their targets are the weak, the fragile, and the dispossessed. Just like confidence artists, they can do nothing to the content, happy, and unafraid. Naturally, the alternative to doctors are parents of expecting parents, and these are the real articles that doctors despise above all else. Unsurprisingly, the same tactics and demeanor can be found in schools, churches, and the government; where all, mostly without having born children, know better than a child's parents.

In the terms of a church, where a child of a sexually abusive father seeks assistance from a monk or priest. Instead of rescue, they will find themselves sexually abused by the church clergy. However, unlike the child's father, such members of the cloth are, generally, protected from legal outcomes. Now, a father, or mother, that sexually abuses a child does so out of fear of losing control over them. In this way, sex is used to establish a stronger, but extremely perverted, bond with their child. In the same way, a priest that sexually abuses a child does so for the same reasons. Therefore, child sex abuse can be seen for what it is, and not, as they would tell you, a disease or mental disorder. Instead, it is a method of domination, and not for purposes of sexual gratification. A pedophile is not cursed with the ability to be sexual aroused by only minors. Instead, they seek to dominate something that is weaker, because they, themselves, are weak. It is the feeling of power that they desire, which could also be seen through the eyes of a serial killer; who desires power. In fact, the fiction of serial killers was made by those that are weak willed, and seek that very feeling of power over others. Within the church, we find these fundamentals replicated through nearly every level of the system. First, the separation of adult and child is equivalent to separation of men and women. Now, in this regard, church is not a designator for the Christian structure alone, but all religious organizations; which are developed on principles of dependence, child exploitation, and fear. The youth pastors groom a child for a dominance under the Christian church, just as a Buddhist monk will do the same for their younger congregation. With control solidified at an early age, when these children become adults, they will, in-turn, enslave their children to the church. Among the many methods that youth pastors employ, the tactic of testimony is heavily replicated. As an example, many a youth pastor has reflected the identical testimony of pornography; with a likely monetary connection to this industry. This is because, from different mouths, a youth might hear the same story. Said youth pastor will have had an addiction to pornography, which was damaging their married life. Of course, after seeking forgiveness from god, they found absolution and repentance. This exact same model of testimony can be heard repeated from different youth pastors, and different churches, which is representative of close collusion. Now, the purpose to this testimony is obvious, when you look at child grooming. First, desensitization to pornography and its use by an authority figure will turn a child onto it. Thus, predominantly male youths will become enslaved to pornography, through church education. Of course, if an intelligent child begins to question these manipulations, they will often become ostracized at church; and the youth pastor will orchestrate other children to turn against the young enemy. In this manner, and through a youth pastor's use of music and a breathy voice, we find the pied piper. Dressed in bright colors and playing a pipe, the pied piper leads children astray. Finally, as stated in the bible, concerning those that lead children astray; "it would be better that a mill stone be tied around their necks, and then cast into the sea." Such should be the fate of the intentional groomers and abusers of children.

Based off of church education, teachers within a school system will orchestrate their class against any students that question their authority. Such trouble makers are often sent to detention, a school's equivalent of isolation punishment, from within the penal system. When it comes to unruly children, or those that rebel against the abuser, young children and youths are sent to special places; and the outcome will be penal dependent criminals, they hope. These are the detention centers and alternative schools. Considering the origin of the school system, we find these places lead back to the church, in whatever form the religious institution might take. However, while the church focuses on domesticating the spirit, the school does so with the mind. This is important because the different faces of the same coin, communism and fascism, are two sides that fight over the mind; but do so at the behest of the same master. While the Nazi, or national socialists of Germany, focused on indoctrinating children into their ideology, at the exclusion of all else, the communists sought to do the same. Therefore, whether a person chose the fascist capitalist, or the socialist communist, they were choosing the same thing. People fought each other, and did not see that they were both fighting for the same master; and giving their children up to be abused, so that the same warmongers could then subjugate and enslave their children, in the same manner. This is where the modern school system comes from, and it is built to the exclusion of all else. Such a system which is built on the fundamentals of control and domination, through abuse, cannot be left to rule. Such a system was built to do evil, and is not broken, nor corrupted. In fact, the indoctrination system is working well, to enslave humanity and dominate all, and to take on an element of the parent's role.

Let us now look towards governmental programs. First, and foremost, one cannot move within life without paying excessive taxes and licensing fees. Just as we cannot progress in life without attending their twin institution that they call college. Still further, we should first look at marriage licenses for a good example. Imagine, if you will, a father that charges his daughter to marry, or a mother that charges their son to marry. Regardless of which parent, or the sex of the child, this would be seen as highly illegal, and child abuse. Yet, we allow the government to abuse us in this exact manner today. Not only this, they charge us for the inherent right of travel, through passports and such. Forget about having a child outside of your home country, one must adhere to arbitrary and excessive paperwork submission guidelines, as well as numerous fines and fees; such as paying for an equivalent of a child's birth certificate. Without these documents, a person can have their illegal child taken by the state; to be submitted to horrendous abuse within the orphan system and child protective services, which is anything but that. Not only this, as with current times, we find that the government believes it has the authority over our bodies, or, rather, individuals in the government believe this. When a border guard tells you that you must be vaccinated to enter the country, or any other individual withholds rightful services, for any reason, they are using the method of the abuser to control you, and your actions. Obviously, such abusers will tell you that you do not have a natural right, or things are not a natural right, and, to them, natural rights are given by them. Any time the withholding tactic is used, or a person says they have authority over you, they are saying that they are your parent and possess dominance over you. Just as people are obligated to wear uniforms in catholic, communist, and fascist schools, so are we forced to wear masks by the parent state.

Chapter Two

The Puppet Show

The majority of us are controlled through human marionettes, or computer generated ones, which take the role of a literal puppet show, of course. As a child, in past centuries, public square puppet shows were often used to spread propaganda to children. Of course, this takes place on the television of today. As with many examples, let us look at the messages written into the Disney film Moana. While this is certainly one of the less egregious examples, Moana clearly seeks to divide men and women. The purpose for this division will be explained later. Naturally, when all of the men in the show are portrayed as nothing more than boys, naïve, or stupid; with the fate of the world resting on the shoulders of women, the message cannot be clearer. Not only is this movie providing the immature male role model to boys, but an arrogant and skewed view of women to girls. This movie is far detracted from reality, but there is a stark contrast in it between the two sexes. Instead of teaching that women can do anything, it teaches that only women can do anything; which means your sex decides who you are, and not you yourself. Now, let us look at some more comical examples of the puppet show. If you ever asked yourself, why is that doctor on TV wearing a lab coat? Considering, they are, in fact, not in a lab. If you have asked yourself, why are we pretending that surgical masks guard against airborne agents? Considering, the surgical mask was developed to keep saliva from entering an open wound, among other things. On the other hand, perhaps you know the answer to these questions, and you simply point them out to others; who refuse to think about the subject. If you have asked these questions, and more, then you are either aware that we watch puppet shows, or are becoming aware of this fact.

Also, you might be aware, if you ever asked yourself, why are those people following that person, who is screaming through an overly sized red plastic cup; or bull-horn? Those that follow the bull-horn are nothing more than the children that might follow the pied piper. Now, the bull-horn followers are often intelligent and rational individuals, as children that might be led astray by the breathy voice and soft music of the youth pastor. However, at that particular moment, when an intelligent individual follows the bull-horn, it is applicable to say that they are distracted. Most recognize this fact, today more than ever, but the puppet show will always be played for those that might pay attention. The luminaries, within the puppet show, can take many forms, and are not always bull-horn marionettes, but they consider themselves masters of light and sound; following the example of the Lord of Light. It is a spectacle of color and sound, which distracts from the horrible and dangerous world around us. An added benefit to this puppet show is that it also distracts us from who made the world such a horrible place, and that the culprits created this very puppet show to distract us from the realization. In fact, those positions in society that, in the eyes of the puppet show, can do no evil are only capable of doing just that. In movies, and TV shows, FBI and CIA agents will be shown as these great heroes, and are usually played by handsome actors. However, in reality, they are usually overweight bureaucrats that do nothing but harass peace loving people, engage in despicable enterprises, and take credit for the good actions of others. They are nothing more than the children that will take credit for the work of another student in school, and be rewarded for it; in order to cheat their way through life. An example of this can be seen within the Osage Nation. Despite puppet show propaganda, the FBI was not helpful in protecting anyone within the nation. Instead, they trampled over the sovereignty of the nation, and rescued murderers from justice.

In a particular example, an Osage family was blown up in a construction accident, conveniently after an outsider had married into the family and stood to inherit a lot of oil money. Now, when this person was placed on trial within the Osage Nation, the so-called Special Agents said that he would not be given a fair trial; so, they swooped in to save their partner in murder. Now, this example serves the purpose of explaining the FBI's actual role, but how this issue of rampant murder was resolved is a different matter entirely. The Osage government changed the rule about inheriting oil rights, while, on the other hand, they sold out the nation and gave all of the people's profits to oil companies. Murders likely still take place, especially with the disappearances of children and the red hand movement; and you can be certain that the FBI and CIA will be involved in that as well. Now, this is only one example, among many others.

In the Bible's book of Matthew, chapter seven, among versus fifteen and sixteen, we find an explanation of the CIA and FBI; to puppet show players that pretend more than act. "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravenous wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" Wherever a federal government agency is involved, you will find nothing but ruin. Wherever the CIA goes, there is a monopoly over illicit substances, an increase in murder, child trafficking, and the like. These statistics will never be reported, as such methods are kept by these vary groups. You cannot imagine that the FBI, nor the CIA, will show a static that specifically judges themselves. Not to mention, if they did, such a statistic would be suspect to say the least. Of course, all statistics are questionable, as most are used for lying in the puppet show; where the rules of reality do not apply. As it stands, wherever a Federal Agency is concerned, nothing but death, disease, and depression follow in their wake. They are nothing more than hideous goblins that seek to dominate, above all else, and they will murder anyone that gets in their way. Now, the Maxwell Trial, as referenced earlier in the book, is also part of the puppet show. To imagine any portion of the civilian government, as prosecuting someone like Maxwell, would be playing into the purpose of the puppet show. No, to expect anything besides torture, death, and brutality, from our prison guards is to believe the puppet show. The example does provide us with some knowledge, and understanding, however. This is because all good lies possess truth, and these various puppet shows will contain something of their creators within them; which might include insights in methodology, or objective. If anything happened to the alleged Ghislaine Maxwell, who may not be a real person, after all, then it would've been done by a military tribunal, and in secret. This is because what Ghislaine Maxwell was doing would fall under the purview of only two groups, with one being the International Criminal Police; likely involved in the very same scheme. Therefore, only a military court would prosecute a foreign national that is doing damage to the nation, and it would be under the jurisdiction of only these two; not the Southern District of New York.

In contrast to the puppet show, we find detractors in some areas. Sabriel, by Garth Nix, is one such book, as is Lord of the Rings, by J. R. R. Tolkien. First of all, neither of these books teach absolute dependence, and they teach to look within; examining what is inside. This is heavily contrasted to Disney, which teaches dependence on a social group of friends, among other related themes. In fact, dependent is the state's word for a child; which is no coincidence. Within The Lord of the Rings, not only is self-dependence taught, but also an understanding of contentment. Within the shire, the Hobbits, in the Fellowship of the Ring, simply wish to be left in peace; within the borders of their town. Meanwhile, the ring, which could be seen as a representation of currency, is desired by all, but to be used. As with modern times, many like to imagine what they would do, should they have a certain quantity of money. Naturally, such lessons are taught through propaganda, and other facets of the puppet show; like within the school system. It is not only one business class that a person might find this lesson; being enticed to imagine themselves with unlimited funds. This is the one ring in The Lord of the Rings trilogy, demonstrating that we are all dependent on currency, and it was built for that purpose from the beginning. None can wield it but its creator, and the only way to be safe is through a destruction of it, and an understanding where wealth truly lies; not in coin. Now, within Sabriel, familial duty is presented, but also reliance on one's own wit. In addition, this work teaches courage and self-reliance. A young woman sets out into an unknown land, in search of her father. While she has help along the way, the importance of self-dependent skills can be found; such as rubbing beef fat into the boot for warmth. Also, the use of tools and contending against monsters alone, as only she had the ability to do so, where important lessons in this book. Other than Game of Thrones, these are two wildly popular works of fiction that work against the intentions of the global puppet show.

Another element to the puppet show is the use of labels. Through portraying certain enemy groups as brutish, stupid, or pathetic, such as sheriffs, you will find the hand of the puppet show creators. They will build up a perfectly molded label, such as crazy and violent religious fanatics, in-order to orchestrate their children against their enemies. Naturally, being in one of these groups, a person might not know how to react, as they would know that innocent people are being orchestrated against them. Thinking they were doing good, those that are manipulated by the puppet show would be used to implement evil. Of course, these manipulations only benefit a certain party, which has no regard for their useful pawns; seeing them as simple tools, to be used and then discarded. An example of this can be found within the United States Military. Following the occupation of Afghanistan, which was launched to protect the CIA's drug trafficking interests, the U. S. troops found themselves guarding poppy fields for the CIA. Then, such wartime veterans were cast out of the military, on any number of bogus charges; including insubordination, violation of the new tattoo policy, failure to adapt, and anything else that could be used. Since veterans of this orchestrated war would have a heightened awareness to the world that we really live in, these individuals could not be allowed to fester resentment within the civilian populace; inflicting dangerous knowledge on the many pawns. Therefore, mobilizing all of their puppet show outfits, the culprits put on another show. In this one, combat veterans were portrayed as violent lunatics, with no control over their urges to kill. Such individuals could no longer tell friend from foe, and most were diagnosed with PTSD; showing alleged symptoms. Now, only a small amount of research is required to find the truth. The majority of PTSD symptoms are the same that come from drugs and pharmaceutical agents that were inflicted upon said veterans, while in service. This demonstrates that this outcome was the intention all along. Once used, the usefulness of the soldier was complete, and they were thrown away like yesterday's trash.

In continuation, much of the evil that has been perpetrated by these individuals should not be met with anger. It is difficult, in many circumstances, to keep emotions from taking hold. Especially, since we are encouraged to be overly emotion, and to be controlled by them; rather than being our own masters. Instead of becoming angry, a person should look at this without emotion, as a warrior that is studying an enemy. Our enemy is very talented at emotional manipulation, and to give into one's own emotional urges is to give into those that would seek to exploit this. One example of how emotions can be used against us is through protest, or so-called vigilantism. Despite the root word of vigilantism being vigilant, this word, because of the puppet show, has become synonymous with unlawfulness, just as the obfuscators of this label are, themselves. They would want us not to be vigilant, and they would want us to react out of anger and frustration. This way, they can direct our energy in any manner they like, usually through use of one of their minions. These can be seen in through riots, which they will call protests, and usually end up with the burning of private businesses, and harassing of others in their long list of victims. Now, the word victim is also a useful label for them, as it is a word rich with dependence, and void of ability. Seeing as all of us are their victims, and there is, essentially, none that are not, then no one else will be left to oppose them. If we see ourselves as victims, then they win; for we are their only enemy, and they hate us.

The only way to keep oneself from succumbing to the puppet show, and being led about by an army of marionettes, is through self-understanding. Conversely, so-called self-development, as a genre, has mostly become part of the puppet show. Therefore, self-help books, and most works with “self” in the title, will not be friends. Fortunately, one method for self-development is through martial arts, something which was taught in the children’s show, Avatar the Last Airbender. The show was particularly egregious, for the puppet show and for many reasons, with one of the main elements revolving around self-dependent orphans. It, essentially, taught children to be self-reliant. While working with friends and a group can make you stronger, dependence on outside forces weaken the spirit. These lessons can be seen through the show’s fictional characters of Zuko and Aang, especially with the latter’s realization that his father was manipulating him through the withholding of acceptance. Due to these reasons, and many more, the subsequent sequel can be seen as an attempt to obscure, diminish, or illuminate the first. Now, martial arts do not constitute the only path to self-development, but achieving understanding, balance, and contentment is the ultimate goal. The cultivation of plants can lead to this objective, as can spending time in nature; and away from mentally taxing structures of domination. Some art forms, such as woodcarving, can also lead to balancing and improving the self, but many art forms have been illuminated, or twisted into a corrupting force. The most obvious of these is modern art, where outlets will promote that which is not art, and diminish that which is skillful. Instead of empowering the self, the orchestrators of the puppet show would have you believe that art is supposed to send a message; which means spread their message, or propaganda. Therefore, one should study the art form that is chosen, where it has been corrupted by the marionette masters, and where it is still wholesome and helpful.

After self-development, and learning who oneself is, analyzing the puppet show becomes paramount. First, recognizing that most of life is governed by the puppet show will be the most freeing step; toward removing its grip on the mind. Next, understanding it will require different analytical tactics. One of these is cross-referencing. When it comes to multiple conflicting viewpoints, seeming like the different faces to the same coin, such as democrats and republicans, the information's focal point is our objective. Looking at where competing sources converge, usually, leads to truth, and this is called cross referencing. In our example of the Osage Nation, long ago, the Osage ruled a vast empire, from atop their mountain stronghold in the Ozarks. Now, the Osage did not build fortifications. Instead, they used the terrain as their defense. With the mountain, the Osage could not be uprooted from their empire, and it took a war within the empire to destroy it, ultimately. However, the history of the empire will not provide us the example, simply a moment within it. What Louis F. Burns describes as the Paper War took place between the Osage Nation and Spain. Now, this would be more aptly written as a war between the allies of the Spanish, but it was mostly fought on paper. Using cross-referenced material, from the French sources of the time, and the Osage, of course, Burns lays out how the Spanish governors essentially lied to the crown. This would've been required for many reasons, but mainly because the Spanish representatives did not want to receive severe punishment; for mishandling the situation. So, the Spanish subjects in the Osage Empire took reports of raids, and other minor skirmishes, added to the numbers of casualties and combatants, and published these as battle actions. Naturally, the French continued publishing accurate accounts, along with Osage sources, and the truth of the situation could be devised. On the other hand, if a person only looked at the Spanish accounts, then they would imagine a bloody war to be raging. On the other hand, if they only looked at the French accounts, they would have no idea of the existence of the conflict, between the Spanish and the Osage; even if it was only on paper. Now, while I might have taken some liberties with this example, it served the purpose to explain how the puppet show works, and has been working for centuries. Burn's official report on this can be found in A History of the Osage Nation.

In continuation on this theme, tactics should be cultivated to combat these evil systems. Once we recognize the hoaxers that manipulate the so-called masses, and how to extract ourselves from it, creative tactics can be devised. This will be required, as the system will recognize those that are no longer under it. The majority of marionettes and pawns are trained to recognize and ostracize anomalies. However, ostracizing will not be the end, as the enemy desires dominance and submission. Ostracizing is a tactic only used to control, such as withholding of acceptance. Once this does not work, then actual attacks will come. These can come in many forms, and are not always physical. Suddenly, one might find that their job prospects are no longer viable, or that some health inspectors shows up to their personal business, often. Perhaps, an old debt might suddenly be brought to court, out of the blue, as the debt collectors pretend that they are here to collect, or, maybe, certain companies might start acting suspiciously; and cellphone companies will file already paid bills with a collection agency. Either way, there are many strategies and tactics employed by the masters of the puppet show, against those that are no longer influenced by it. Recognizing that they will never leave an adversary alone is paramount, and that the fight will not go away, nor can it be avoided. There are, ultimately, only two choices. Either willingly submit to the puppet show, and its masters, or fight back. This book is an example of a way to fight back, and information is one of the most potent methods; but such information must be presented in a way that it draws more attention than the enemy puppet show. In this way, cultivating an understanding of art can assist in developing such a strategy. Furthermore, encouraging verification through personal experience can help a person divine what is really taking place in the world. When the so-called pandemic of the year 2020 struck, local outlets in Ohio published pictures of hospitals that were stretched to capacity. According to the puppet show, the hospitals in the state were flushed with the dead and dying. However, after a cruising past these buildings, the truth was easily revealed. Not only were the hospitals not stretched to capacity, but they appeared not to be staffed at all. The lights were not even on, nor were there any cars in the parking lots, of nearly every hospital, from Columbus to Lancaster. Now, there are numerous hospitals in Ohio, and it would be difficult to check all of them, but only three in enough to counteract the lies on the puppet show box; the television. However, far more than three were not staffed at all. Therefore, when a person reports something, it would be prudent to request what was actually experienced by that person. On the other hand, while experience will be presented from a particular viewpoint, and might be skewed, it would be much more effective than believing in a paper war. Finally, it is not this author's intent to direct the actions of another creatively embodied human-being, as doing so would be nothing short of playing the bullhorn marionette. This is simply a description of the path that the author chose, and it is for the reader to decide which one they will take.

Chapter Three

The Playground and Gardens of Children

THE WORD KINDERGARTEN is a prolific word that is used throughout the so-called “Western World.” While there are similar structures in the Eastern portion, the word Kindergarten is not generally used. Now, the one odd factor about this word is that it is one of the very few German words, used within scholastic spheres; most being of Greek, Latin, or French origins. So, this begs the question, why is German used? And, furthermore, why is the word never translated? Like so many other words that are used in their original form, this word would sound either extremely simplistic, or horrifying, in its translated form. However, translating words in the areas of law, education, or medicine would offend the sensibilities of those that use these to appear intelligent. Essentially, this is because they use language as an insulation. With Kindergarten, as with other words in the realm of “intellectual society,” the translation would allow the so-called “layman” to interpret and combat their systems. Furthermore, no parent would desire to put their child in a Garden of Children, but Kindergarten sounds like something cozy and cultivating. In fact, Kindergarten, or a Garden of Children, is designed to cultivate the children like crops. Once the children become adults, they are ripe for harvesting. So, adults, having been cultivated in this manner, will place their own children in the same place. Putting this into context, we can look at the Rothschild saying, “the children of one’s youth are as the arrows in the hands of a warrior,” which is written on their coat of arms. Now, with a Garden of Children, the children of others become the weapons of those that control the system. In fact, most are taught not to look too closely at this system, which is funded by the very people cultivated in it. However, this system is not controlled by those that place the investment. In simple terms, the Garden of Children and the entire education system is funded by the profits of the citizens. Meanwhile, the system itself is controlled by a board that is appointed by financiers. Furthermore, to qualify for this board, a person has to have the right pedigree; meaning they are agents that will hold up this system. If nothing else is gained from this explanation, or this book, just remember, that if you put your children in Kindergarten, then you are placing them in a Garden of Children.

“Keep it simple stupid” and “don’t over think it” are two phrases that most have heard. However, few think about where these phrases originate from. When it comes to the standardized testing system, the advice of not over thinking the question is given. Additionally, students are taught to imagine what the test maker wants, versus what is true. If a question on a test is wrong, the student simply has to play along and pretend; offering up the answer that is desired. Essentially, tests of today do not actually test knowledge, or skill of a subject, rather they test whether or not the student will ascribe to the dogma. This is like the medical tests of 17th century France, when the medical school authorities would test a candidate’s grasp of Latin and ask them religious questions with only one answer; like are women inherently sinful? This process shows whether or not a crop is good, or bad. Students that refuse to go along with the dogma will receive bad grades, and be pushed towards the fringes of society, or into the abhorred manual labor positions. Therefore, those that submit to the system, and present themselves as willing participants on the later standardized tests, will be properly formed crops; ripe for cultivation and placement into a career. Using our farming analogy, a farmer of today uses machines to plow fields into perfectly formed rows. They care little about the quality of the product, as quantity and uniformity are paramount. Have you ever wondered why all the tomatoes in a grocery store are red? This is the same method applied to the school system; which cultivates children for uniformity and quantity, while their so-called bad apples are thrown out. Furthermore, wild crops are not cultivating, but cut away for the purposes of manufacturing perfectly controlled crops. This is because wild crops are inherently imperfect, and not fit for consumption, and the same logic is applied to human beings.

Now, when you look at those that build and control this system, a person will realize that they do not practice what they preach. The middle level managers will place their children into private schools, which are only moderately different than the public ones. These are designed to cultivate a different sort of crop, and generally produce your upper-level laborers, what are usually referred to as "white collar." However, the cream of the crop, the children of the financiers, they have tutors and individualized private instruction. Instead of being treated as a manufactured crop, these children are given the attention that a greenhouse plant receives; special care, time, and effort. Naturally, this concept ignores the fortifying nature of experience in the wild, which means it will always have a blind spot when it comes to cultivate well-rounded talent. While this system, when fully understood, is extremely abhorrent it persists today in an obligatory fashion. Anyone who takes an alternate approach will find life difficult moving forward, because such individuals cannot easily be harvested. They are, according to the system, wild plants that grow in an uncontrollable way, and must be burned out to make way for more manageable crops.

Taking another look at this, we can use the metaphor of a playground. Most governments, throughout the globe, take on the role of a bully, who invades a playground and tells all of the other children that he has authority over it now. Any that do not fall inline are immediately attacked by the bully's followers. Of course, as demonstrated in the Vatican's love of the arbiter role, a parent would step in to use this moment as a teaching lesson. Of course, when other parents become involved, the analogy can become a little complicated, as most adults do not wish to view themselves as children. Therefore, if we imagine the bully and victim as brothers, a parent might separate the children and punish the bully, or encourage the victim to stand-up for himself. On the other hand, our imposter parents encourage the bully, and tell us that it is our fault that we are victims. Worse still, the imposter parent will protect the bully, and punish those that defend themselves. This is the role that our Mother Church usually takes, pretending to be an arbiter, and we see the same scenario played out within the juvenile prison systems, often referred to as school; more on that later. This takes place because our system is built, first and foremost, on control through abuse. Those that abuse are rewarded, while those that empower and defend are punished; within this system. Nothing in the system is broken, nor corrupted, it was built to do this vary purpose. The abusers were very effective at abusing us, and convincing us that these abusers came about because of our own actions; and that it is all our fault.

Some historical examples can be found of individual efforts to implement children as tools; or train up children to be such. In the fictional show the Blacklist, Raymond Reddington's bodyguard is extremely loyal because he was trained to be such; from a child. Just as with the elephant and the rope analogy, a human being can be molded into perfectly obedient servants; taught that their bonds are unbreakable from an early age. Mochizuki Chiyome is a plausible historical example that might be used to describe this. Now, Chiyome could be a fictional person, as much of her alleged life exploits are suspect, but her examples present an understanding of methodology, and other ways in which children can be turned into weapons. Rather than bodyguards, Chiyome sought to form prostitute assassins, through exploitation of orphans. Similar to the example of Ghislaine Maxwell, and the exploitation of children as sex objects, Chiyome sought to take it one step further; making them into murderers. We see this very thing depicted in Game of Thrones, also, where children are used as spies and assassins. Furthermore, the adoption agencies depend on orphans, but use the children as a product, to be bartered or sold. Instead of having the child's best interests at heart, the excessive levels that adoption agencies put on the process is to charge for processing paperwork, and use the child to extort money from prospective parents; mostly for the benefit of churches. Now, through adoption agencies, we find a different use for children, besides prostitutes and assassins, but equally as evil. Some examples will present to us an alternative, such as the always applicable Osage Nation. Not only does adoption not need to be complicated, but it can more accurately be seen as sponsoring. Within the Osage Nation, many trace their ancestry back to adoption. Whole families could be adopted into the nation, including single mothers of three or more children. They only needed a member of the nation to sponsor them, and vouch as their adopter. Similarly, adoption agencies, or church organizations, are not necessary; despite their loud protests to the contrary. Instead, prospective parents, in current society, must obtain adoption paperwork from a court. Now, because most of the court system is beneficial to child trafficking, and such industries, it is likely the attempts to adopt through the court, without an agency, will be denied. The same can be seen with lawyers, as cases will often get thrown out for arbitrary reasons; in order to protect the racket that is paid representation, against self-representation. Of course, the adoption method through a sovereign indigenous nation is still open to us, and is a method that we can combat the evil trafficking system, and the corrupt courts that protect them. The very same could be seen in Australia, where Aboriginal Nations adopted other citizens and provided protection against authoritarian mandates; during the age of the COVID hoax.

In Warren Lewis's book, A Splendid Century: Life in the France of Louis the Fourteenth, we find a possible example of child trafficking. However, this example could also relate to insulation against such evils. Now, considering the place was burned during the French Revolution, we will likely never know. It could have been destroyed to cover up child exploiting secrets, but, perhaps, not because the place was used for such activities. Either way, more research and converging sources are needed, to know one way or the other. This polemic place was, known as Saint Cyr, was a school for girls; constructed under the king's mark and under the direction of his alleged secret wife La Madame de Maintenon. Now, as convents were greatly disliked, by both Louis and his secret wife, considering such are used for child exploitation and trafficking, it is no surprise that these two worked together to diminish the effect of church grooming. On the other hand, grooming children for the state is simply changing the master, and the one that carries the slave driving whip. In the book we also find that Louis is fond of visiting the young girls at the school. Now, this could be for purposes beside pedophilia, but such designs could also be the case; we cannot quite judge at this juncture. Unfortunately, one verse in the book suggests that experiments were done on the girls at the school. As Lewis points out, in a subject of correspondence the Madame writes, "what's this I hear about girls in the sick-room making a fuss about taking their quinine?" As with the soldiers of the Iraq and Afghanistan conflicts, Mefloquine, a variant of Quinine, was used to establish the current PTSD hoax. Furthermore, Lewis demonstrates the Madame's ideas through this passage, "the aim must be to fit girls for the world, not for the cloister; the training must be not only Christian, but in the best sense of the word, worldly." Again, consider the context of the clutches of the evil pantheist and Satan worshipping church, this place might have been an institute of fortification against dependence. Equally, while the Madame was extremely involved with the development of the school, and its charges, most of its graduates were said to be highly skilled and knowledgeable. Therefore, with this example specifically, it seems unclear whether or not this presents an understanding of grooming dependence. Either way, it is up to the reader to decide, on all things, which way such an example should be seen.

Finally, we can see the use of children as bargaining tools within many pages of the bible, but the most obvious is the example of Pharaoh in Egypt, and the emphasis on the first born. After the pharaoh had the first born killed of their Jewish slaves, the same was done to the Egyptian first born. This example demonstrates two things, but mainly demonstrates the true conflict on this planet. The prize between the global war on terror is the child, and we are fighting not against any one state, but against evil institutions that seek to rob us of our children, and turn them into slaves. Perhaps, this very thing has been done to us. Through abortion, many children are killed and turned into products, like vaccines. However, other methods are used to kill children, or cause them to become sick and die. Either way, it takes an open mind to discover how many murders have taken place under our very noses. When it comes to the so-called pandemic of 2020, Mike Dewine of Ohio, and his appointed Health Director, present an understanding of their perspective. Amy Acton, the alleged name of this lady Health Director, stated “she just wants to hug the world,” and that “we are all their children.” Of course, Mike Dewine, like most politicians, probably won his seat through theft, including not a small amount of colluding with child traffickers, but his Health Director’s words accurately represent the viewpoint that child exploiting so-called world leaders hold. In all things, they know better than each and every one of us, and they have an inherent right to run our lives for us. Naturally, they would run our lives for their own personal benefit, but they would never openly admit such a thing; despite admitting this view toward us.

Chapter Four

The Global Prison and the Concentration Camps

Many things have been shown to us within the last decade, but the most obvious, due to rampant lockdowns, was the nature of our existence on the is planet. The world has been orchestrated into, essentially, a prison; for all of those that are born into the so-called lower classes. In fact, the idea of a social class was created to implement this grand-prison. While they see themselves as our prison wardens, being them that consider themselves king-makers, there is one thing that they fear above all else. This would be our realization that we are not locked into this world with them, but, rather, they are locked in here with us. As in the penal systems around the world, we, the prisoners, greatly outnumber them, the wardens and guards. Therefore, they must pit us against one another, in, essentially, the same way that they pit prisoners against one another. Most in prison are placed into divisive gangs, which often work with the wardens, and they are mainly divided based off of their looks. So-called diversity groups are a civilian example of this. Physical characteristics always providing the best model, the first division will be based off of sex, often referred to as gender. However, the obfuscation of the word sex, and replacing it with gender, is another method for division. On the other hand, the most obvious physical barrier is the division between so-called Whites, Blacks, Latinos, and Asians. Now, the nonsensical nature of these terms is of little consequence, because these labels have to do with dividing the prisoners. If the groups, which they consider all to be low class, fight one another, then they will not take over the prison. Now, in places where the penal system has failed, and the prisoners took over, the state will often siege this area. Now, the first thing that we realize, due to rampant lockdowns, is that prison were not actually built to protect those of us that follow the laws, regulations, mandates, and other orders of the state. Not only is the rampant release of violent criminals into the general populace a major sign, to allegedly avoid the spread of a particular virus in prisons, but also a push for forced vaccinations; which is a practice within the penal system. Now, just as they do not see the so-called criminal, or felon, to possess rights, they do not consider a basic human right to be real. Instead, they see that all rights, liberty, and freedom, is bestowed by them; our prison wardens. Such is demonstrated by the Statue of Libertas in New York City, which is perfect example of how they can give freedom to us slaves, but also take it away.

Now, prison is just one area that perfectly describes how we are manipulated. This, of course, starts with time-outs as a toddler; teaching a fear of isolation as punishment. Meanwhile, the striking of a child is outlawed, which is another demonstration of the state asserting its authority as a prison warden; saying which methods we may use as discipline, and which we may not. However, the most important part is the teaching of dependence and fear of the penal system. On the other hand, there is no reason to fear the penal system, as we already live inside of one. In fact, we are, all of us, guilty from birth. Just as within prisons, we are searched for weapons and contraband everywhere we travel, we are unceremoniously ordered to places, and to do things, with no say in what the government can tell us to do. In fact, we are even forced to pay them to sustain this global prison system. A person does not need to commit any crime to be guilty, simply be born in a place that they despise. Now, if you want to know who they are, simply look to those that play your prison guard; telling you when and at what age you can consume alcohol, or tobacco. You can also find your prison guards in stations of travel, entertainment events, and nearly any place in life. In actuality, the only place that prison guard is not present is within the home, but that has all but changed. The internet based systems, bogus search warrants, allegedly based on probable cause, among other excuses and dubious reasons, allow the prison guards to enter your home and toss your things. We have no rights, because we are all prisoners from birth, and the guilty do not have rights. Now, if you want to see where your wardens are, simply look at those that have fortified themselves against us; usually with some rather bogus pretext. The Pope modernized the Vatican guard, due to highly suspicious assassination attempt, just as with the example of Gretchen Whitmer in Michigan. Of course, in the case of Whitmer, we find that the FBI orchestrated the whole thing. We do not know who orchestrated the fake assassination attempt on the Pope, but I wouldn't be surprised if the International Criminal Police were involved. Multiple areas have been fortified against we the prisoners, and the District of Columbia is yet another example of this. Naturally, one of the easiest areas to look, in ascertaining one's status as a life prisoner is marriage; where we must request permission from the state to do so, just as within the penal system. Ironically, due to this realization of criminal status, the enlisted members of the military have more freedoms than a civilian counterpart. This has to do with the realization of who the prison wardens and prison guards are, and that we must unite against them. Furthermore, many military outfits seek to unite, rather than divide. In the U. S. Marine Corps, the say that we might come in different shades, but we are all green. That idea is used to explain that old physical divides must be set aside. Conversely, in prison, you will be placed within whatever group your skin color represents; or in a rival skin color group, as they wish for you to be lynched. Putting blacks in a white prison, and whites in a black prison, is an easy way to get rid of a state's problem child.

Now, if you ever wanted to figure just how they orchestrate us into these groups, look no further than all of those highly insulting ethnic background questionnaires. Whether you enter a school, doctor's office, or are taking a survey online, let alone the highly suspect national census, they will always divide us based upon the same labels. These labels serve the same purpose as gangs within the penal system; to break us down into our tribe. Without a doubt, those with a lighter complexion will be called either white or Caucasian. These two terms are nonsensical, and, should a person put down a different identity, or fill something in the blank section, the staff at a hospital will not abide by such a note. In fact, I doubt any group, organization, or institution cares if you fill in the blank section; they will choose for you, based on how you look. With blacks, the tribe could be listed as African American. Now, just as with White, or Caucasian, if one were to put American, or perhaps membership within a different American Nation, then they will simply ignore this. Such groups like the Basque, Occitanians, Iroquois, Navajo, Osage, Quechua speakers, or any other group, do not exist to them. If you come from a group in Europe, but you have darker skin, then they will put black, or African American; despite having no actual ties to America, nor Africa. Additionally, to put one's position in an American Indigenous Nation will not suffice either, as they will simply move this under the Native American designator; as if those that are born within the Americas are not Native American, which, of course, we are not. Practically no one is a native of the Americas anymore, nor would one want to be; as this would make you their born enemy and the lowest form of citizen, in their eyes. On the other hand, no one is a sovereign member of any nation, nor state. We are all subjects. The ludicrous birth certificate model proves that, because it is not birth that makes one a citizen, but the purchase of a piece of paper. Of course, you see these same ridiculous labels mirrored across the globe, and it is not a problem that is only systemic to the United States of America. Furthermore, this division is not based solely off of skin complexion, as they will use anything possible to do this. Country of birth, ethnic backgrounds, and other such designators are used to divide us. Also, just as with the complexion example, the officials choose for us.

Of course, the criminals are generally those that do not submit, whole heartedly, to the state. Conversely, if you sacrifice your children to father government, and mother church, then you are absolved of your inherent crime of existence, and are permitted to exist as one of their pawns. This is the precise reason for the Nazi concentration camps, and the propagandized focus on the incarceration of the Jew is simply a method of obfuscation. They were those that were distrustful of the Nazi state that went to concentration camps; which included practicing Jews, not ethnical jews. Now, we can see these so-called concentration camps in the penal system of today, where anything can be done to the prisoner, with little regard for public outcry. Most of this is done in secret, or blamed on a reason. Prisoners might be experimented on, without their knowledge, or outright killed; and there is no recourse, no questioning of this fact. Now, this does not only take place in prisons, as these practices are found within orphanages, such as feeding irradiated oatmeal to children, and in the military; as with Agent Orange and Mefloquin; among others. In fact, the list of actions that have been taken, which mirror the exact system of the Nazi concentration camp, is staggering, to say the least. On the other hand, if you do not submit whole heartedly, then you are an inherent criminal. In better understanding this birth certificate thing, and how it connects and binds us to this system, we must look to the Naval Theatre in the War of 1812; which was fought between the United States and the Kingdom of Britain. In his book, the Naval War of 1812 or the History of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, the alleged writer, gives us insight into the purpose of the birth certificate, and how it truly came about. In the first chapter it is stated that "Great Britain's doctrine was 'once a subject always a subject.'" I would contend that this is still the doctrine, and is leveraged against almost every nation on the planet. In fact, there are no sovereign nations today. The story continues, "Great Britain contended that her war ships possessed the right of searching all neutral vessels for the property and persons of her foes." If these wasn't egregious enough, "the British officers were themselves the judges as to whether a seaman should be pronounced a native of America or of Britain, and there was no appeal from their judgement." Now, there are two reasons why this practice continues today, and those born in America are not inherently natives of America. The first of these reasons, and the second, deal with treachery and unlawful actions by the highest levels. Not only was the United States sold in 1871, through a so-called treaty with Britain, that was nothing short of bribe money, but we were also betrayed in the war of 1812, when peace was illegally declared with the British Crown. Furthermore, it is no surprise to find that child trafficking circles involve ties between all of the United States based institutions and the royal family members in Britain. In fact, Ghislaine Maxwell, currently on trial for child sex trafficking, is a British national. Alternatively, to look at British citizens as the prime culprits for all of these acts of war would lead to missing the point entirely. It is highly likely that all of this was orchestrated by and for the Vatican, for many reasons; if not the large number temples of Greek and Roman deities across the globe. Finally, we find how peace was illegally declared in 1812, as the book continues. "After dragging on through three dreary and uneventful years it came to an end in 1815, by a peace which left matters in almost precisely the state in which the war had found them."

Meanwhile, blame cannot be laid only at the feet of treason, for coercion through horrendously vile and evil acts cannot be discounted. Especially considering recent events, and the child trafficking angle, we find depictions in the fictional Game of Thrones series to be applicable. Of all places, this book provides a manner with which we can better understand the current situation. Apart from this book's depictions of the use of children as spies and assassins, one element stands out above all else. The use of wild fire, buried below the book's fictional city of King's Landing, gives us a point to view just how the Vatican conquered the world. Apart from extensive subterranean structures below the Vatican, its Apostolic Archives, and Saint Paul's Cathedral, the Statue of Liberty, in the City of New York, boasts a robust network in its base. In fact, most cities across the globe have subterranean structures, and, arguably, a healthy supply of explosives to level any unruly part of the world. These cities are the closest things you will get to a physical prison, and blowing one up from below would give any evil warmonger, like the Pope and his blood-washed cardinals, the ability to coerce any individual into doing their bidding. In fact, one such subterranean explosion all but confirms this, being the one that took place in Lebanon; which was clearly not caused by a store of fireworks, as claimed. This was likely a demonstration, for Military Intelligence units around the world, but other factors prove combined purposes of the subterranean tunnels. As shown in Game of Thrones, the subterranean network was also used for transporting children, just as the so-called Underground Railroad was mostly used for trafficking children, and not, as reported, escaped slaves. Why would those that wish to enslave humanity have any desire to assist escaped slaves anyway? Finally, it is likely that the British Crown orchestrated the Separatist War in the United States, commonly referred to as the Civil War. Simply look towards the conflict between industrialist Britain and the so-called King Cotton in the South. Conversely, this war may have been orchestrated by the British Crown, as with many others, but it was certainly done on behalf of the Vatican, and so-called mother church. Finally, the greatest benefit to training in martial arts, other than self-improve, is to terrorize these prison guards and wardens. They should feel that no matter how many weapons they take away from us, and no matter how many ways they try to make us safer for them, wherever they go, they will always be in danger.

About

The Author

S. C. Coleman

S. C. Coleman has written stories since a child. Among many published works, he has a long list of accomplishments outside of writings. Serving honorably for five years in the Marine Corps, S. C. Coleman also retains fluency in multiple languages, including Spanish and Portuguese.

Growing up in Ohio, S. C. Coleman always wished to explore the world, and has traveled to many places, but writing stories has always been his main passion.

Books By This Author

The Monk, the Mob, and the Marquis

Establishes an understanding of the true basis of power in the world, and where they came from.

The Magical Me

Unlocking an understanding of the magical you, and the creative ability within, through the Magical Me..

A Dark Triad

In a perilous star system, far from earth, a hero arises from a society built on murder and intrigue.

Israeli Fighting

An explanation of the history and concepts behind Israeli martial art: including the many styles, systems, and forms that exist today.

Language I Am: The Path to Language Success

A practical guide to language learning, and how to better oneself in this learning discipline.

The Glass Empires

on the greater continent, an evil force plagues the land, and many heroes will rise, but which will ultimately succumb to the darkness?

The First Valkyrie: Dawn Bringer

The arduous journey of an orphan will culminate in a great battle, when her powers become fully realized.

The Tournament of War [Out of print]

Follows a fictional tournament of war, between different nations and on an uninhabited island.

